

Computer Lab Research

October 29th, 2009

Today in the computer lab, we will be researching information for chosen persuasive topics.

The primary source I'd like all of you to use is the LAUSD Digital Library. From here, you can visit useful sites such as:

Gale Cengage - This is a great database of articles about almost any topic that interests you. From here, there are two primary search tools: "Oposing Viewpoints Research Center" and "Student Resource Center Gold." They will each let you easily click on a topic of interest and browse through resources. After you've conducted your search, be sure to use the tabs above in order to refine your search. Try looking in the "magazines" and "news" tabs to find helpful recent articles from credible sources.

If you want, you can also search the websites belonging to credible sources such as CNN, NPR, MSNBC, LA Times, NY Times (and other newspapers).

Finally, one especially useful website for looking at several sides of an issue is procon.org

As usual, keep an eye out for sources that are NOT credible including Wikipedia and most other sites on the internet. Be critical, question everything, and find useful resources.
