English 10

ProCon website. This is a fabulous place to start because the website offers videos, charts, graphs, overviews, and non-biased information. <http://www.procon.org/>

Here's the link to the Internet Public Library. Awesome place to start, too! <http://www.ipl.org/>

Here's the link to Library Spot. This is a very extensive website but it will lead you to very credible information. <http://www.libraryspot.com/>

Although it's a little more difficult to use, you still might find interesting sources. <http://findarticles.com/>

And don't forget to use the ProQuest Database to get your magazine and newspaper articles. Here's the information:
